

THE 2017 PROGRAMME

The founding document of modern human rights law, the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, posited that 'recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world'. Still, however, one may wonder whether this foundational importance of human rights has come to be fully realised in the international legal order. In this MACIL course, we will discuss the role of human rights law in the broader context of the international legal order. Does international law recognise, or even promote, the fundamental importance of human rights law?

2017 Session
(31 July - 11 August)

HUMAN RIGHTS:
Keystone or Just

Architecture of International Law?

COME AND STUDY
INTERNATIONAL LAW IN MUNICH!

CONTACT

Do competing regimes of international law (e.g. trade law, investment law) accept, or rather challenge, the 'primacy' of human rights law? The question of whether human rights actually constitute the 'keystone' of the international legal order is thus of interest not only for human rights lawyers and activists, but also students and practitioners of other areas of international law.

We are looking forward to receiving your application!

6th Munich Advanced Course in International Law (MACIL) – 2017 Session

Human Rights – Keystone or Just another Brick in the Architecture of International Law?

GENERAL INFORMATION

With its rich academic heritage – famous international lawyers like Erich Kaufmann and Bruno Simma held a chair at LMU – and the excellent research facilities provided by one of the major law libraries in Europe, Munich is an ideal place to study public international law. Apart from that, Munich offers a fantastic atmosphere for international encounters.

The MACIL summer school, run by LMU's Institute of International Law, offers an opportunity for students and young professionals to dedicate two weeks to intense and in-depth study of public international law. In addition, the city and its beautiful surroundings can be enjoyed during extra-curricular activities. The programme takes place from 31 July to 11 August 2017 and is entirely taught in English.

Lectures are given by renowned experts of public international law, academics as well as practitioners. The MACIL class is typically composed of 30 to 35 students, allowing for a close exchange of ideas between lecturers and students. Classes of recent years have brought together participants with different academic backgrounds – advanced undergraduates, master and PhD students as well as young professionals from the field of international law, international relations or related subjects – and more than 20 nationalities each year.

ACADEMIC PROGRAMME

The questions to be discussed are going to include, amongst others: *

- Human rights and general international law: specialty or coherence?
- Foundations of international law: sovereign states v. the individual
- Human rights approach(es) to environmental protection
- Human rights law in times of war: its uneasy relationship with international humanitarian law
- International criminal law as a vehicle for, and threat to, the realisation of human rights law?
- Human rights law and the international security regime
- Human rights law and the WTO
- Human rights law and international investment law: protecting investors and/or those affected by foreign investment?

FACULTY

Lecturers for the 2017 MACIL class are going to include, amongst others: *

- Samantha Besson (University of Fribourg, Switzerland)

- Robert Cryer (University of Birmingham, UK)
- Malgosia Fitzmaurice (Queen Mary University London, UK)
- Markus Krajewski (University of Erlangen-Nürnberg, Germany)
- Daniel Moeckli (University of Zurich, Switzerland)
- Brunno Simma (Former Judge at the ICJ; Universities of Munich and Michigan)
- Christian Walter (University of Munich, Germany)
